To the READER.

THE knowledge of the pay allowed to every Officer and Souldier, (serving in an Army) being generally necessary, (yet it is not presumed to make known any new principals) there being in the knowledge of every Souldier his allowance of pay per diem, but being to accompt for any long time, and not expert with his pen, may here finde (according to his condition) his allowance of pay, from a day to a week, from a week to a moneth, from a moneth to thirteen moneths; but some allowance of pay may be here inserted, which in these dayes are not allowed, perhaps the Souldier merited more formerly, the Reader is therefore desired to make use of those summes that are certain at this time; And whereas in the Catalogue, or List hereunto annexed, you shall finde all Officers and Attendants (desired in an Army) with their allowance of pay per diem; And there being divers Officers having one and the same allowance, are not therefore all drawn up in the Tables, one being drawn up will serve all of the like kinde.

Souldiers take their names from the Dutch word Soldoye, which signifieth pay or stipend, profit being one of the ends why men undertake the Military profession, and honour not the onely (though the chiefeft) of their aims. And therefore they which were of opinion that the way to reform the Militia of Flanders, was to redouble the labours of the Souldiers, and shorten their pay, were much mistaken, and it will rather be found, that the scanting of the Souldiers profits, and increasing their toyl, procureth corruption.

The honest profit of a Souldier may be twofold: 1. Ordinary, which is set pay. 2. Extraordinary, which are rewards for speciall meriting services, and these are joyned with honour. Among the Romanes the Legionary Souldiers had allowance of pay, corn and apparell by a Decree of the Senate 349 yeares after the building of the City, having till that time served without pay, or without many profits, and having all necessaries provided them of the Publick. A Horseman's pay was then a drachma or denarius a day, (of our money about seven pence half-penny) in Cæsar's time it was doubled (as Sutorius testifieth and Augustus did augment it to three denarii a day; they had their apparell allowed of the Publick, and corn, namely wheat for themselves and attendants, and barley and oats for their horses, being two Medimni of wheat, and seven of barley and oats a moneth, the Medimni being about a bushell and an half of our measure: They had also their shares of booties, which were very large and ample; besides, for extraordinary rewards, they had oft-times assignements of lands of inheritance, and houses also, sufficient to maintain them without any Trades; moreover, they had rewards in money; at the Triumph of Pompey out of Asia, every private Souldier had 1500 drachmas (of our money 46^l. 3^s. 9^d.) and the Officers in proportion: And shortly after, at the Triumph of Cæsar, every Souldier had 5000 drachmas, which is 156^l. 5^s. Furthermore they had many kindes of honourable rewards for signall acts, and those bestowed in great pomp at publick assemblies of all the Commanders, by the Imperator, or Generall himself, and a Record kept of those services. These rewards were of many kindes, as severall sorts of Armes, Horses, rich Trappings, Jewels, golden Bracelets, besides their severall sorts of Crowns, as their Corona Civica, Obsidionalis, Muralis, Castrensis, Vallaris, Navalis, which Crowns were put upon their heads in great state and solemnity by the Generall; these they wore upon all publick occasions, as at Playes, in Triumphs, in Judgement; for their Military profession made them the more capable (afterwards) of offices in the Administration of the Common-wealth. Thus I finde formerly written.
